

Revd Toby Crowe

Toby lives with his family in Sparkhill, Birmingham – a wonderful and welcoming area, where most people are Muslim and where things that happen in Israel and Palestine are very keenly felt. He is vicar of St John's Church there; and also of Christ Church, in the next-door suburb of Sparkbrook.

He spends a lot of his time working across different faiths, whether through involvement in his local community and schools (including but not limited to two church schools), or his role with charities such as The Feast, a youthwork organisation where he is also a trustee.

He longs to see people of different faiths coming together, sharing their differences and growing in understanding and respect – and then working together to make the world a better place. To him, the work of FODIP seems an important part of this bigger picture, and he says he feels privileged to be part of it.
