

Adam Linton is the Project Manager at FODIP.

Adam is from County Down, Northern Ireland, and has worked as a facilitator and mediator across its diverse communities. Having had the opportunity to work with a wide range of groups in many different environments, his focus has been on grassroots programmes in interface areas, neighbourhoods, and communities still affected by both old and new conflicts. For him, it has been an honour to collaborate in these spaces, which has deeply shaped both his practice and self.

He is especially interested in the dynamics of conflict and the processes of peace. Adam is a big believer in strong, resilient relationships and feel that progress comes as a consequence of truly knowing one another — interdependence! His particular passions include dialogue, philosophy, and grassroots community cohesion.
